Evidence-based practice is the idea that occupational practices ought to be based on scientific evidence. That at first sight may seem to be obviously desirable, but the proposal has been controversial. Evidence-based practices have been gaining ground since the formal introduction of evidence-based medicine in 1992 and have spread to the allied health professions, education, management, law, public policy, and other fields. In light of studies showing problems in scientific research, there is a

The COVID-19 pandemic is proving no exception, as claims that policy decisions must be based on science and evidence are rampant. On one level such claims are entirely obvious; of course we want evidence to guide our response. Accordingly, governments make reference to scientific evidence (as well as expert judgment) to justify their actions (or, more often, inaction) and to explain their changes in policy as responding to changes in the available evidence.
