The vertical slit at the tip of the glans is the urethral meatus (m); it is the opening of the urethra (u). The urethra is a tube-like structure through which both urine and semen flow. The base of the glans is a coned shape called the corona. Around the corona are numerous small sebaceous glands, which in latin are called glandula Tysonii odorifera. These glands secrete a whitish material which has a peculiar odor; this cheese-like substance is called smegma.
